

Conference: "Russia and the West"

Turning Point: How to deal with a repressive and confrontational Russia?

24 March 2022

AXICA Congress Zentrum (Pariser Platz 3, 10117 Berlin) & ZOOM

With the war against Ukraine, Vladimir Putin has brutally attacked the European order. The political and humanitarian catastrophe currently unfolding in Ukraine, which is fighting a desperate struggle against a far superior adversary, marks a turning point. This does not come as a surprise. For years, the Russian leadership has pursued a revanchist and militaristic course.

Russia's systematic rearmament, the military intervention in Ukraine that has been ongoing since 2014, the bombing campaign in Syria, the deployment of Russian mercenary troops in other countries - all these were clear signs of an aggressive forward strategy by the Kremlin. Its goal is to re-establish Russia as a great power and adversary of Western democracies. Putin has demonstrated that he is willing to gamble big and ignore all the relevant norms to achieve these goals.

The recent wave of repression against Russian civil society, independent media and the democratic opposition is the flipside of the same coin. In recent years, the Putin system has increasingly evolved into a dictatorship that barely hides behind a pseudo-democratic facade.

How should the West deal with a Russia that is increasingly repressive internally and aggressive externally? Are the countermeasures taken so far sufficient to contain the Kremlin's neo-imperial ambitions? Are our societies ready to bear the cost for a joint European security? How can we isolate Russia politically and economically and still cooperate with Russian civil society?

Conference languages: English, German and Russian.

The conference will be held under Chatham House Rules.
